

Writers at Home and in Isolation

This category is calling for stories about the impact isolation has had on writing, ability to write, and sense of community. This might also cover coping with and/or appreciating families and cohabitants (including pets) and the personal meaning of the space in which a writer writes.

We are looking for prose pieces of up to 750 words. You may submit up to three pieces, as long as your combined word count does not exceed 750. In this category, we are accepting: blog posts, articles, anecdotes, non-fiction, memoir, bullet-point style articles, nature writing, and personal essays.
